ADA Transition Plan

What is a Transition Plan?

Title II of the Americans with Disability Act requires a Transition Plan to provide an outline for achieving ADA compliance.

Who needs a Transition Plan?

ADA provides regulations regarding architectural barrier removal. Title II of the ADA protects individuals with disabilities from discrimination in services, programs and activities provided by government agencies.

ADA Transition Plan

What a Transition Plan Requires:

State and local government agencies must:

- Conduct a Self-Evaluation of facilities, programs, services, and activities
- Gather public input
- Provide an outline of the methods to be utilized to remove these barriers
- Determine a schedule for taking the necessary steps to achieve compliance
- Designate the official responsible for the implementation of the Transition Plan
