Comment: As an alumna of the University of Michigan, I expect the highest levels of integrity from my alma mater. The Inglis family entrusted their property to the University. It is now our obligation to protect their endowment. It would be acceptable to sell the property to another bidder if the cost of upkeep exceeds the University's ability and/or willingness to pay, however conditions must be attached to the sale to protect the historic property as the family wished. Please do the right thing.

Comment: Inglis House is a historic landmark and a place of serene beauty. It has long been a destination for walkers in Ann Arbor eager to see the glorious grounds and mansion that housed a family of historic significance. A historian friend of ours, Alice Wexler, once stayed with us in Ann Arbor while researching Inglis House and the relationship between the family's daughter and Wexler's subject of study, Emma Goldman. I'm sure Alice would have much to say about the proposed sale of Inglis House - and its prospective demolition.

Comment: This beautiful propriety was donated to the university of Michigan by my grandmother's family. It should be designated as a historic landmark and preserved, no matter who owns it! If the university can't spare some of its vast wealth to preserve the property, then it should be given a historic designation and handed over to an owner who WILL preserve it.

Comment: The Inglis House was not meant to be sold. The owner intended this to be part of the University for very special purposes and to extend in time far beyond now. The community was not alerted that a sale was intended. Many of these neighbors are donors to the University and actually care about the future of Inglis House. It is disgraceful that this neighborhood was not included in conversations before the sale was accomplished. Also, how many of the members on the Board actually live in Ann Arbor and care about the future of the house?! This is NOT good PR for University of Michigan, by any means.....I'm sorry that the University does not value it's own community enough to include in prior discussions....what a situation you have created here for yourselves. With the help of the many, many learned, intelligent and creative and resourceful individuals that reside here, we would like to have had the chance to participate before NOW!

Comment: Surely the University with all of its resources could figure out a 1/more communicative approach to this matter, and 2/ more creatively arrive at a viable solution to retain and maintain this sweeping and unique property so close to Main Campus. As a university supposedly dedicated to STEM and environmental concerns. there must be at least one creative and sustainable way to retain and effectively use this property, which is irreplaceable. How about environmental studies? Continued use for VIPs, greater use in connection with the university? The list can go on. Please fight for retaining this property and using it as the legacy that it is to the Inglis Family. Surely their donation must have some strings attached that will prohibit the U from selling it to some thoughtless, mindless, profit driven builder.

Comment: Inglis House enhances the University of Michigan and provides a very special venue for distinguished guests and gatherings. It would really be tragic to destroy it. It belongs to an era that the University of Michigan should be proud to claim. Surely, funds can be found to preserve this unique property.

Comment: Please slow your roll and try to remember that the community is equally linked to the University, as the University is to the city. If there was a way to get what you want, which is to unload this financial burden and also comfort the community; can't you at least give the community time to help come up with another plan so both could be pleased with the outcome.

Comment: The Inglis House is a part of my family history that I may now never see up close nor show my children. More importantly and sadder still is the reality that with each passing generation we veer farther from an appreciation of the history that made us and instead instill in our youth a foundness for a disposable world. Our family works tirelessly to build what we have and carry forward the ethical values of hard work, trust, empathy, responsibility, generosity and appreciation. James & Elizabeth Inglis were no exception. The fate of the Inglis House seems to me like a perfect opportunity for young minds to blossom with brilliance and share new solutions that will increase university revenue at far less cost than anticipated. I deeply appreciate the opportunity to comment especially since living in Alaska I will not be able to attend the meetings. Thank you to all those who have shown their appreciation by being involved.

Comment: How short-sighted it would be to sell off this beautiful property to the highest bidder! No trust in UMich to preserve and protect its gifts.

Comment: I urge those voting on the future of the Inglis House to reflect on the gravity of their actions and reconsider their decision. The property is a unique treasure that has been sustained for generations. It was once truly valued and honored by the community and University and holds a place in history. Once gone, it will be lost forever.

Comment: This historic house is part of the fabric of Ann Arbor. It has served in many important roles and was a GIFT to the University. At the time of accepting the gift I'm sure there was no foresight that would have allowed the donators (my ancestors) or the donees (on behalf of the University) to see they needed to put special restrictions in place so a certain few, 90 years later, could disrespect the importance and intent of this gift.

It is wrong to tear down or sell this house. It was a gift that came with the intent that it would be cared for and used. Please continue to honor that commitment or, at the least, return it to the rightful Inglis family (more closely related than I), whom I don't believe have any knowledge of the University's plan. Thank you, Chiara Barbier
