Hello Zach and Kennedy,

As you may know, I recently accepted a new position as a child and family therapist to start in May following the completion of my MSW. I have been in communication with my new supervisors about what to expect with scheduling and wanted to give you a lot of advance notice about upcoming changes. Because work with children requires a lot of afternoon and evening hours to work around their school day, my new workplace unfortunately let me know that they will not be able to accommodate me attending commission meetings on a monthly basis once I start this position.

I understand that the commissioner terms are supposed to be three years, and I am very sorry to have to end my time on the disability commission earlier than expected. While this was not at all an easy decision to make, I believe it is important that I take this job opportunity as it is a good pathway to advancing in my career goals. I have really enjoyed my time on the commission and will still be able to attend meetings through April. Since this was a circumstance that I hadn't previously planned for, I will of course do what I can before May to help with transitioning some of the social media work to a new person since I had offered to take the lead in that (and of course, will continue to be available to work on social media things for the next few months).

Thank you very much!

Best wishes,
Elena
