Yes, there are a lot of people who like to live in urban environments, but there are also a lot of people who enjoy quiet

R1 and R2 neighborhoods and they have invested their life savings to buy into their dream. The current city plan was bought and made to order by the consultants according to the parameters specified by Taylor, the handpicked council members, developers, and their builders' union based on their dreams and without consideration of any real data or for the rest of the people who live here. It's an old ploy to make the changes you want to sound legit because you have high paid consultants saying this is what should be done.

The Taylor city council often overrules any planning commission decisions that go against their agenda, but your opposition to this ass backward planning process result would at least make them aware that their power play has been noticed by people besides us stick in the mud/head in the sand fellow residents.
