Dear members of the Transportation Commission,

In watching your meetings, I've heard mentioned a number of times that the main reason we can't have protected bike lanes other than the wide two-way cycle tracks downtown is that the city does not have a plow small enough to clear them in the winter. I find this interesting, because I live across the street from Las Vegas Park, and yesterday observed the sidewalk and pathway being cleared by this plow vehicle, which appears to be sufficiently small to clear a bike lane. You can clearly see the city's seal on it, so it seems that this is a city vehicle and could presumably be used to clear protected bike lanes.
