To Whom it Concerns

When it originally came to my attention that the University of Michigan had purchased the ironic building on stilts and had plans for a bank there I emailed not in favor of the plans submitted. The recently redeveloped plans that were submitted and shared are disappointing as the concerns people in the neighborhood had seem to have all been dismissed by the University.

First, the new property layout and design are an example of poor use of land and space, which is already at a premium in this area. Second, it is a business that the University already has on the Plymouth corridor, among the numerous other banking institutions that line Plymouth Rd. Third, concerns for safety and access to the neighborhood pool and elementary school, as well as traffic access both into and out of the neighborhood for the people like my family who live here were all disregarded. Finally, the traffic going onto the property can only do so from off Prairie Street which is already tight. Quite simply put this design compromises the safety and integrity of the corner.

I respectfully ask that the City Planning Administration decline this plan and ask the University to go back to their drawing board.
